

California Needs Health Care Reform

California citizens are losing health care every day.

In California, 2,190 people are losing their health care every day during this economic crisis. Nationally, 14,000 people are losing their health insurance every day. [Center for American Progress Action Fund, 3/5/09]

Our broken health care system is hurting the California economy.

The California economy loses between $18.4 billion and $36.69 billion every year due to lost productivity stemming from the uninsured. And we are losing between $124 billion and $248 billion nationwide every year. [Center for American Progress, 5/29/09]

The average family premium in California costs $1,400 more because our broken health care system fails to cover everyone. Nationally, the average family premium costs $1,100 more. [Center for American Progress, 3/24/09]

California consumers have little choice in health care.

Kaiser Permanente holds 24 percent of the market. They control 66 percent of the market together with one other company, Well Point Inc. [Center for American Progress, 6/16/09]

California doctors support health care reform.

Dr. Ninad Athale of Sacramento, CA says, “I want health reform that ensures that all people have access to very basic levels of care; that pays providers and pharmaceutical companies for the work that is most needed, not that is the most glamorous.” [Doctors for America, Voices of Physicians, <http://www.voicesofphysicians.org/>]

Reforming our health care system is key to economic recovery.

Half of all people filing for home foreclosure nationwide in 2008 cited medical problems as a cause. [Christopher T. Robertson, Richard Egelhof, and Michael Hoke, “Get Sick, Get Out: The Medical Causes of Home Foreclosures,” Health Matrix 18 (2008): 65-105.]

Health care costs for small businesses have grown by 30 percent since 2000, and our manufacturers spend more per hour on health care than manufacturers in Canada, Japan, and the United Kingdom combined. The Coburn-Burr alternative unravels the employer-based system and keeps insurance companies in charge.

The Coburn-Burr plan does not provide sufficient protection for patients against abusive insurance company practices such as denying coverage to people with pre-existing conditions.

Insurance companies today use the flimsiest reasons to deny people coverage. For example, a woman in Los Angeles was denied coverage for her breast cancer because she failed to disclose that she had visited a dermatologist.

Under the Coburn plan, insurance companies could continue this practice—called “rescission”—which “has left thousands of Americans burdened with costly medical bills despite paying insurance premiums,” according to the Los Angeles Times.

The Coburn-Burr plan would also unravel the employer-based system and replace it with an insufficient tax credit that doesn’t even cover half of the average family’s medical costs.

The $5,700 per-family tax subsidy proposed in the Coburn plan is less than half of the $12,680 that the average American family paid for health care in 2008.
